

Glue

J. LeDoux

I saw you leaving, you saw me too
You smiled at me, that's what you do
I tried to follow, but you were gone
Now I'm waiting, sitting home alone

I keep thinking about, you smile and eyes
I can't believe your words were lies
You made me happy, so very glad
I can't forget, the times we had

There must be something in my brain
There must be something in my veins
There must be some primal glue
That keeps my memory stuck on you

When I saw you go, I didn't know
I thought you'd be back, in a week or so
It's so hard, realizing that
I wasn't really, where you're at

I dream about you, most every night
I dream you're back, and everything's right
I keep hoping my dreams will come true
That I'll wake up, right next to you

There must be something in my brain
There must be something in my veins
There must be some primal glue
That keeps my memory stuck on you

I keep thinking about, your smile and eyes
I can't believe your words were lies
You made me happy, so very glad
I can't forget, the times we had

There must be something in my brain
There must be something in my veins
There must be some primal glue
That keeps my memory stuck on you
